

Is your investment working hard enough to bring in income?

To grow yield in the low rate environment and capture investment opportunities that may otherwise be ignored, it is necessary for investors to broaden their horizons and consider different markets. The Invesco fixed income series gathers income opportunities from multiple markets, helping you to navigate the low yield environment.

Emerging Markets Bonds

- The outlook for Asia, South America, Eastern Europe and other emerging markets is benign, given improving economic fundamentals
- Emerging market corporates are offering higher yields for financing of business development projects
- A basket of EM assets, including high yield and investment grade bonds, could fully capture the income potential

Read more

Asian Bonds

- China's "Belt and road" campaign drives infrastructure development of Asia, enhancing demand for financing
- Asian bond default rates maintain at low levels, while sovereign re-ratings benefit bond prices
- Yields of Asian bonds denominated in USD are higher than in developed markets, providing attractive opportunities in a low yield environment

Read more

Indian Bonds

- The strong workforce in India fuels high economic growth, driving large demand for infrastructure development financing
- Improving fundamentals and forex reserves support local currency performance
- The re-rating of Indian bonds attracts inflow from foreign investments, who are seeking higher yields

Read more

RMB High Income Bonds

- An accelerating service sector contributes to the improving Chinese economy, benefiting the new bond issuance for business development
- Yields of RMB bonds are higher than in the US and Europe, and new issuance premiums provide capital appreciation
- The volatility of RMB currency is lower than in the other developed markets, providing more stable returns

Read more